A LEVEL STARS SET FAIR FOR EXCITING UNIVERSITY COURSES AROUND THE COUNTRY

Queen Elizabeth Grammar school is delighted to announce another strong set of A Levels with 81% of results in the top grade brackets.

With a 100% pass rate, a great majority of boys are now set fair for a diverse range of exciting university courses and apprenticeships at top institutions around the country.

Head Boy Adam will now go on to pursue his passion for French and Classics at The University of Edinburgh.

He will be joined north of the border by Hugo, who will attend the University of St Andrews, where he will study an exciting Medieval History and Archaeology course.

It's next stop Durham University for star student Sam, who will study a 3 year Mathematics course!

We wish Senior Prefect Amai the best of luck at LSE, where he will now go on to study Economics!

Meanwhile, Michael will explore his passion for media and marketing at the University of Nottingham.

Faiq will now take a step closer to a dream career in Medicine as he attends the University of Liverpool.

When you've been doing the job as long as I have, I suspect there is the danger of some repetition creeping into one's reflections on A Level results day. That said, it was business as usual at QEGS with another set of strong A Level results.

Of course, it has been far from business as usual for these Y13 students across the UK. Having had their final year cut short, it made it all the sweeter to see so many happy faces this morning as they opened their envelopes! And what a great bunch of boys they have been - we have really enjoyed seeing them come through the QEGS ranks and I'm delighted to see so many of them securing places at the best university addresses right around the country.

My thanks to everyone who has made this happen - the parents who have kept them fed, watered and loved, the staff who have taught them with passion, patience and skill and, of course, the boys themselves who have handled such an unusual year with typical QEGS spirit.
